

Summative assessment

For your summative coursework, you should write

EITHER (A) an essay OR (B) a blog

Word limit: 1500 words, including footnotes, but excluding bibliography.

Deadline: Friday, 6th March, 4pm. Submission via Moodle.

A) Essay

Your essay should discuss the following question:

Bringing links within the scope of the right of communication to the public provided for in art. 3 of the Information Society Directive fundamentally undermines the openness of the internet.

In your essay you should agree or disagree with the above statement, backing your position with references to the relevant authority.

Use formal language, but you can use first person (I).

B) Blog

Your blog should discuss a contemporary debate in intellectual property law of your choice.

Your blog should address the following points:

- 1) What is the problem?
- 2) Why is the intellectual property law relevant?
- 3) Who are the stakeholders and what lies in their interests?
- 4) Your assessment if and if yes how intellectual property law should be used to address the problem.

Your blog should mainly engage with the EU and/or UK intellectual property law.

Your blog should include a short title.

You do not have to use formal language.

References

Whenever you report a fact, you should refer to the source of your knowledge.

Whenever you engage with works and ideas of others, you should refer to their works communicating those ideas.

While no set referencing style is required, OSCOLA is commonly used by the UK law researchers and students. If you chose to write a blog, you might want to consider using in-text referencing, such as APA. See UofG Library website on referencing styles.

Unless necessary, avoid using direct quotes. Try to explain points made in the literature in your own words (while supporting it with relevant references). When using direct quotes, you should always provide your own reflection/comment on the quote. Remember to always use quotation marks.

AI use

You are NOT allowed to use any form of GenAI tools to generate your essay or blog.

Note: you are permitted to use dictionaries, spelling and grammar-checking software to help identify and correct spelling mistakes and grammatical errors as well as referencing software (even if they are powered by GenAI). You can use translation software to translate original work you produce in another language to English.

Use of permitted GenAI-powered tools needs to be acknowledged in a separate Acknowledgements section at the end of your work.

Note: using GenAI in ways which are not explicitly permitted as well as not acknowledging the permitted uses of GenAI-powered tools is considered academic misconduct.
